Promoting the Development of Children Through Early-Education Intervention

This all-day professional development opportunity will bring together teachers in non-public schools who teach 3, 4, and 5-year-olds. Teachers will explore the latest in emotional and social development of children in Pre-K and Kindergarten. Based on the latest in brain research and social science understandings, teachers will design meaningful activities to convey content and skills appropriate to this age group.

The Children's Institute, which will provide the content of the day, utilizes the Pyramid Model of behavior management that supports promotion, prevention, and intervention in the classroom.

It promotes children's development by building relationships and creating supportive environments so that young children can thrive in the school setting.

Participants will receive CTLE credit and attendance is limited to 100 persons.

Pyramid Model Preschool-Kindergarten Module 1

“Strengthening relationships and supporting engaging environments where every child feels valued, confident and competent.”

The Pyramid Model 1 public health, evidenced-based, tiered framework that promotes young children's social and emotional competencies and prevents challenging behaviors.
